The lesions are pale red at first, later become darker, and appear about the end of the first week, coming out in successive crops. They are usually few in number, but in some patients form a profuse eruption, covering the entire body and extremities, and are occasionally seen on the face. Sometimes the lesions are capped by tiny vesicles, at other times they are hemorrhagic. The other cutaneous lesions seen in typhoid form a very interesting group. Among these may be mentioned herpes, urticaria, sudamina, desquamation, erythema, erysipelas, purpura, furunculosis, abscess, carbuncle, impetigo, onychia, infected sebaceous cyst, decubitus, tache bleue, and lineae atrophicae. The following description of these conditions is based on a review of the literature, and on a study of their occurrence in 1230 cases of typhoid fever, occurring in the medical services of Drs. Powell, Lowman, Upson, Cushing, and Hoover, at Lakeside Hospital; to...
