Excerpt: . . . energy in her wrongs and outrages. The quarrel between the two governments waxed hotter and more intense during the whole of the year 1811. Early in the year 1812, President Madison, determined to endure British insults no longer, declared war, and the great struggle at once began upon the high seas, along the Canada border, upon the great lakes, and up and down the Mississippi river. The British government had sent a large number of agents to enlist the various tribes of Indians located on both the northern and southern borders of the lakes, and on both banks of the Mississippi, against the American white settlements. These Indians were furnished arms, ammunition and tents, and paid in gaudy presents to attack and destroy the settlers, burn their homes and run oft or kill their stock. This was employment that suited but too well the murderous disposition of the savages, and they rushed to their bloody work with brutal haste. They were encouraged and led on by two powerful leaders. These were Tecumseh chief of the Paunees and Black Hawk, chief of the Sac, Fox and Pottawatomie tribes of Indians. In the territories of Indiana, Illinois and Missouri, many settlers and their entire families were murdered, many settlements were broken up, a num ber of forts on the northern lakes were compelled to surrender and their brave defenders put to the tomahawk. The horrible butcheries, perpetrated by Indians at the mouth of the river Rasin...
