The system was not altogether a success at Harvard. President Eliot, in a public address in Baltimore, February 22, 1878, said: I have seen the results of this plan at Harvard, where they short lecture courses were k/ipt up for some time, but I do not consider them very profitable. The result, as I observed it, was that they encouraged short, detached work, not that year by year. 1 This is undoubtedly the defect of all such courses, unless duly coordinated with private reading or regular class instruction. iv. University Extension In America. This subject was first publicly presented in the United States at a meeting of the American Library Association in their session upon...
