Grimbart and Reineke went straight across the heath, towards the royal palace. Reineke said: -Happen what may, this time I feel that am going to good fortune. Dear nephew, I have committed some more sins since I last made confession. Listen to me.--And thereupon he told, with great delight, of one more prank that he had played upon the wolf.--There, nephew, I have made confession; now teach me how to obtain pardon. Grunbart said: I find you laden with fresh sins. They follow at your heels, and you have no time to escape them; for I fear you are near death. Lest, therefore, they overtake you suddenly, I now absolve you from them. Ah, you will not be forgiven for the are and Bird, when you come before the King. How could you behave so rashly?--Pooh! said Reineke, one has to make one's own way in the world. One can't behave as in a monastery. He who sells honey licks his fingers, now and then. Lampe took my fancy; he frisked up and down before my eyes; his fat little body tickled me; and I put love aside. As for Belline, what trouble his stupidity had given me! Well; dead is dead, as you say. We will change the subject. Reineke then began to show how the King was himself a robber, and his lords were robbers, and the Fox was only persecuted for his want of...
