Reviews

It is one of the best books. Indeed, it really is playful, nevertheless an amazing and interesting literature. It is extremely difficult to leave it before concluding, once you begin to read the book.

Paw-Paws and Pith Helmets is a look at the lighter side of the life of the people sent out to Africa by the Colonial Office to provide local government in the colonies in the early twentieth Century. It is the story of a rather inept young man who, in order to avoid being sent to Sandhurst by his ambitious father, joins the Colonial Service and is assigned to the Treaty Territory. This is a strip of land along the Rovuma River between Tanganyika and Mozambique where the Portuguese Governors have been experiencing incursions by Germans from Tanganyika who appear to consider it their own little private hunting ground and flagrantly ignore the border. The British are offered the chance to administer the area on behalf of Portugal and Asquith's government seize the opportunity with expectations of ultimately taking over the whole of Mozambique and thereby extending their influence in the region. The hero, Godfrey, finds himself living in the all-male Boma with a disparate group of people from several different sources who seem to share only some element of unreasonable hostility towards the owner of the only dukkah in the area, one Trader Harris, an avaricious German Jew with a large family. They discover that the Portuguese have done precious little in the way of developing the area and notice that in particular, there are no medical facilities at all, either for themselves or for the local natives. The District Commissioner arranges for a medical team to be sent out and after a time they arrive. The team comprises a delightful but aging doctor and three nurses. Their arrival has an immediate and drastic effect on...
