Purchasers can usually download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1877 edition. Excerpt: . . . 1850 are peremptory. It imposes a new duty upon the surveyors, to be performed immediately after they lay out a road. It directs them to assess the damages which an owner of land or real estate (not an applicant for the road) will sustain by the laying out a public road; and with their return of the road, also, to make a return of the assessments, certified in writing under their hands, particularly specifying the amount assessed in favor of the respective owners. In this case they have omitted this part of their duty altogether. The reason of the neglect is admitted, but ignorance of the law excuses no one. Being of opinion that it is the duty of surveyors, under the recent act concerning roads, to adjudicate in writing upon the damages sustained by every owner of land (not an applicant) taken by laying out or altering a public road or highway, and to make some assessment in favor of each one of such owners, so that an appeal can lie, and to return the same to the court with the return of the road, the present return cannot, in my judgment, be sustained. The whole proceeding is an entirety, and it must stand or fall together. Let the return be set aside, but, under the circumstances, without costs. 1. In laying out a highway over lands of any one not an applicant therefor, the surveyors must certify their adjudication, as to the...
